By Anne Garrould and Valerie Power

Henry Moore, renowned throughout the world for his scultpure and drawings, was one of the few moden artists to extend his work into the realm of tapestry.

Working closely with the Tapestry Studio at West Dean, Moore authorised a series of tapestries based on his drawings. The Brilliance of the drawings is confirmed in their transition into large tapestries, seven or eight times the size of the original.

OSBORNE SAMUEL

MODERN AND CONTEMPORARY ART

This is the only work to deal exclusively with Moore's tapestries, and is now available for the first time in paperback.

Ann Garrould places the tapestries in the contaxt of Moore's work, discussing the drawings chosen and the way in which the subjects reflect Moore's three 'obsessions': the mother and child, the reclinging human figure and the larger form enclosing the smaller. Valerie Power describes the production of the tapestries, from the dyeing of the wools and the interpretation of the drawing in consultation with Henry Moore, to the final weaving.
